Interview with Harry Andreae

Mr Harry Andreae is believed to be the last living crew member of the USS Wainwright DD-419. At the age of 89 Mr Andreae stays active by playing golf. He reported aboard USS Wainwright DD-419 in 1944 at Casco Maine and departed from her when the war as over in 1945 while she was in port in San Diego California. During the interview Rich Molck learned that sailors even back in WWII carried hammocks as part of their sea bag and that when Mr. Andreae reported aboard he had to sleep in his hammock for a short time until a rack came open on the ship. Rich also learned the during the war the both the German and Japanese hated DD-419 because of its speed and how deadly she was with her guns, torpedoes, and depth charges. At the end of the war DD-419 was en-route to Okinawa when she was ordered to reroute to Tokyo Japan and to be on sight for the signing of the treaty that ended the war in the Pacific. The Wainwright was tired up astern of the USS Missouri in Tokyo harbor for the signing of the Treaty.

Mr. Andreae is looking forward to attending our reunion next year in Charleston and we are looking forward to having him in attendance.
